Public Servants Association (PSA) Women PSA encourages women to be change makers 7 hours ago iPan On Women's Day, the Public Servants Association (PSA) calls on South African women to be change makers in society. Women, despite having climbed mountains in pursuit of recognition, are unfortunately often still viewed as weak, defenceless, and in need of the guidance and protection of men. Yet, history has proven the opposite. From the historic Women's march in 1956, to current-day pillars of society, women continue to play a vital role in society. The PSA has been an ambassador for women's rights and equal opportunities for women, over decades. In 1971, for example, these efforts resulted in women being to obtain permanently employment in the Public Service. These efforts continue today, with the PSA advocating for women to receive the same opportunities as their male colleagues. The PSA further calls on government to strengthen security structures and prosecutions to eradicate gender-based violence, which continues to impact on women's potential to claim their rightful place in society. The PSA therefore encourages women to embrace their calling and to be the change they want to see, to build businesses that create employment and support other women to become activists for change and self-empowerment. iPan Independent Pan African News Network aims to provide accurate, fair and balanced African news stories relating to economics, lifestyles & cultural activities, in the form of videos, audio podcasts and written articles for both online and broadcasting.
